Want to give fish fillets the glamor treatment? Serve them with cream sauce into which you've stirred diced cooked shrimp. You'll need about a half cup of the diced shrimp for a cup of medium sauce, and this amount of the shrimp sauce will be enough for four portions of the fillets. Sprinkle with minced parsley before serving!

Few people can get along with-out friends — one reason why some of us become "joiners," members of social clubs, professional societies and church organizations. Most young people when they sign their name to a membership card hope that their new affiliation will help make new pals.

Some young people are puzzled about friendships. Either their best gal doesn't live up to their expectations insofar as expecting loyalty from a true friend is concerned or they find it impossible to make really good friends, no matter how they try.

Dr. William C. Menninger, writing in the Life Adjustment Booklet, "Making and keeping friends," stresses that it is a good idea to take occasional inventories of your friendships to examine what your friendships mean to you, and whether you can improve your relations with others.

He suggests this friendship checklist, offering a number of questions to start you on your quest for friends. Answer each "yes" or "no" . . .

1. Is your main feeling toward your friends one of affection rather than superiority or envy?
2. Do you enjoy the successes and achievements of your friends?
3. Do you stick up for your friends and defend them from the unkind words or acts of others?
4. Do you go all out for your friends in times of difficulty and offer sympathy and understanding when needed?
5. Do you always keep confidences?
6. Do you stand by your own convictions and opinions, and respect those of your friends?
7. If you promise to do something, do you always follow through?
8. Do you try to prevent outbursts of anger and thoughtless remarks, and follow them with a sincere apology if they do occur?
9. Do you think of considerate things to do for your friends — praising a new dress or an A in Algebra, showing appreciation for a favor, remembering birthdays?
10. Are you as courteous to your friends as you are to your casual acquaintances?

If you answer "yes" to most of these questions, say Menninger, you probably don't have much to worry about in the friendship line. If you've found some "no's" you can improve your score! It's easy to make friends once you learn the things that are important in friendships, he says.

Even after you make a friend, you are likely to have your ups and downs, Dr. Menninger says. Sometimes you expect too much from a friend and become impatient or disappointed in her when she doesn't come through. Another time you may discover that you don't care for your friend any more.

But more often, he says, "the explanation is simply that moods and interests change from one day to the next. You may feel right now that you couldn't get along without Celia, but there were probably times when you didn't care if you ever saw her again. . . ."

Such ups and downs shouldn't alarm you if they happen once in a while. Everyone experiences them, he reminds us. But if the friendship is worth while we should try to keep the "downs" to a minimum.

Reasons why you can't make friends might be: a selfish "what's in it for me" attitude, a desire to have endless compliments, praise and applause from friends, a fear of making friends, an "inferiority complex" (a feeling that you're not as good as other people), a repulsive aggressiveness due to an insecure and inadequate feeling, to many acquaintances which precludes having real friendships. Then there are home handicaps such as that faded slipcover or worn rug that you are ashamed of. Or perhaps your family is well to do but doesn't enjoy the company of young people.

These things suggested by Dr. Menninger are worth thinking about. It is only by knowing where the trouble is that the "no-friend" sickness can be treated. When you've found the key to the door of friendship, it is easy to make friends.
